FRANCE/ENGLAND: I did what I could for as long as I could. What a mess, eh?

FRANCE/AUSTRIA: Guess you didn't need my help.

STAN JOHNSON WRITES: You obviously misunderstood my Question. I did not Question Number of NMrs and I understand when Standby is called I need to write both Players.

My Question was about Mr Lachcik submitting orders after Mr Boyum took over. In Fall 1908 you said orders used were by Boyum; to my understanding that makes him the player of record. Then suddenly in Winter 08 the original Player comes back. You can say what you want, but there is no way to anticipate that. I have played Postal Dip for more than 20 years too (24 in Fact) and this is the First time I have ever seen an original Player submit orders after a Standby Player's Orders have been used.

Since I obviously don't understand your Standby Policy Please remove me from your list.

I really don't understand why you take such a snotty Tone any time you are asked a Question about your Policies; who are you the Pope of Diplomacy?

HINSDALE--Stan, I'll try again: to my mind a standby is a standby and not a replacement. The standby becomes a replacement when the original player misses three-in-a-row. The standby is there to keep the game moving, to fill in temporarily until called upon to take a position permanently.

As to being the Pope of Diplomacy, no, that would be Mr Calhamer who lives in LaGrange Park, about three miles from here. If I have had a "snotty tone" toward you I apologize. I would explain it by noting that in all the months you have been a player in these pages, I have never ever seen one kind word from you toward anybody, whether it be me or in your press to other players. Your tone has constantly been snarling, and I probably have reacted to that. Although you may be the nicest man in Arizona, the personality you project is that of a stereotypical New Yorker.

OIL SAGA CONTINUES

[Update to the STAR]

by Janet McDonald

OLD GREENWICH, CONN, March 18--Thanks, Doug Durham, for your response to our oil tank problem. It was comforting to hear from someone who understands the situation. The tank is out and most of the contaminated soil has been removed--120 tons of it! We have a remediation system in place to completely clear the property: A passive air vent will allow air into the soil (this slowly breaks down the hydrocarbons--excuse my weak science), and a dry well was set to collect oil as it leeches with the action of water moving through the soil. This well needs to be pumped periodically, and the contents will be tested for oil parts per million. The state is satisfied with our efforts and they didn't mandate the remediation, but we decided to do it anyway to get the property entirely clean. We have checked with the state; there is no financial help for residential properties, only for commercial. Our bill has now surpassed the estimate and will probably reach $20,000--and then we still have to repave the driveway and pay for the quarterly pumping and testing of the well. We'll see what ramifications it will have when we eventually need to sell our house.

This certainly has been a stressful chapter in home ownership. We're hearing of more and more similar cases from friends in Connecticut and in Illinois. Doug Durham's advice to the prospective buyer is crucial: Know what you're buying, and don't release the seller from liability for future losses. We will be much smarter in the future.

The next thing to worry about in Connecticut is lead interior paint...

[From a recent edition of the Chicago TRIBUNE:

IS RIGHTSIZING GOING IN WRONG DIRECTION?

by Dale Dauten, Corporate Curmudgeon

[King Features Syndicate]

The late Cardinal Spellman, once one of the world's most influential Catholic leaders, used to tell of the time he was at work in his office when an assistant came hurrying in to say, "There's a man at the front door claiming to be Jesus Christ." The assistant asked, "What should we do?" The cardinal thought a minute and replied, "Look busy."

That story reminds me of simpler times, when an employee merely had to "look busy" to impress a boss. These days, a wise employee must look indispensable.

Whereas employees once worried that the boss was looking, now they worry that someone above the boss is taking a hard look at their very positions. No one is safe. I've heard rumors that Batman is taking a hard look at Robin. And I'll bet that television executives at "Siskel and Ebert" are wondering why they are paying for four thumbs and only using two.

How do you survive a hard look from your executives? It's toughest if you're in a staff department; that is, if you don't make or sell something. One option is to become a "profit center." This sounds like a good way for a department to prove its worth and become indispensable, but let's review what really happens.

Say you run the graphic arts department of a big company. It's your job to turn out everything from product brochures to slides for executives' speeches. Your department has always been evaluated by the quality of the output, making deadlines and not getting complaints from other managers.

Naturally, you've done everything you can to produce first-rate graphics. You hire great people and you have the latest computers and software and use only the best suppliers. You're good and you know it. And each year you argue for a bigger budget, for more space and more people, so you can get even better.

Then, this pleasant world becomes a profit center. You're informed that other departments will pay for your services. And they will be free to go outside the company for their graphics. This is the corporate equivalent of the collapse of communism in the Soviet Union. Pass the vodka. The first changes is that your "users" become "customers." You stop avoiding the pesky little jobs, and quit trying to talk managers out of tiresome projects. You say "yes" to ridiculous deadlines because you don't want the work to go outside the company. In other words, your service improves. Fine.

But you also need to put a price on your work. And you quickly discover that when you price your services at what local firms would charge, you lose money. Not only do you have a big staff and all the priciest equipment, but you have a chunk of the corporate overhead assigned to your department.

You're assigned a share of the fancy office tower, a share of the executive suites, corporate jet and the stadium skybox you never get to use. You're dismayed when you compare your overhead to that of local competitors, who rent cheap office space behind the Piggly Wiggly store and use "borrowed" software and freelance designers who work at home and have no benefits.

It's at that moment that you truly understand the word "overhead," how it hangs there above you, blocking the light. And in the next moment you understand why the downsizing and outsourcing trend will continue.

And in the third moment you feel the bitter irony of having arrived at this conundrum: For your department to be profitable, you'd need to lay off the people who declared you a profit center--your boss and most of the other people above you. Plus you'd need to sell off the office tower and the jet and the skybox.

That's when you realize that a lot of people above you in the organization may look busy, but they sure don't look indispensable. And then you begin to imagine how the corporate world would look if layoffs rolled up instead of down.

...which brings to mind the following report from the Writers Guild/CBS contract negotiations:

During a discussion about the extraordinary amounts of money CBS spends by sending graphic projects to shops outside of CBS, Don DeCesare explained that the bookkeeping is structured so that keeping work in house has no economic advantage for a division. "As far as what CBS spends, inside CBS or outside CBS, the dollars are the same to our budget." The Guild pointed out the inherent waste of such fantasy bookkeeping. The Graphic Artists noted that out of house projects are even more wasteful in that they are often reconfigured or redone when they arrive at CBS.

The Guild questioned the frugality of a company which pays Graphic Artists 17% less than the other networks while at the same time spending significantly more than those networks on out of house work....

howls of disbelief only got louder.

"Then Jim Gillespie took the floor, so to speak, to lecture on the details of the Spanish Inquisition (it was Holy Week, you'll recall, and a discussion of the practices of the Roman Catholic Church was timely).

"Then as the meal was being consumed along with the seemingly never-ending beer, Rich Mylak, perhaps moved by the penitent tone of the discussion, disclosed the details of how he "long, long ago" had mooned crowds in Soldier Field and Comiskey Park..."

THIS WEEK IN THE UBA: Chuck Myers' Charleston RiverDogs improved to 5-1 by taking two of three from Vince Bianco's Bodega Bay Clams. Then, in a performance uncharacteristic of last year's edition of Matthew Myers' Hickory Crawdads, Hickory swept an opponent, Bodega Bay being the unfortunate recipient. The series included Dizzy Dean besting Lon Warneke 2-1 in a 14-inning pitchers' duel, and a 6-4 Hickory victory on a 3-run homer by "Sunny" Jim Bottomley in the last of the 9th...Bob Osuch's Tucumcari Jugheads gave notice that they again are in the hunt, by taking two of three from defending champion Denver. Van Lingle Mungo of the Omelets was 8-innings into his second straight shutout when Tucumcari struck for 3 runs in the 9th as Denver survived 5-3, but then Satchel Paige and Carl Hubbell hooked up in a great pitchers' duel, which stood at 1-1 after nine innings. Hubbell had been lifted for pinch hitter Johnny McCarthy, who was intentionally walked with first base occupied. Lefty Grove came into the game for Jim Benes's Omelets and promptly got shelled by the Jugheads who scored 5 and wound up winning 6-2. Odell Hale's 3-run homer in the 8th inning lifted Tucumcari to a 4-3 victory in game 3...Unlike last season, Ted Frank has come to play this year and his Troy Haymakers opened the campaign with a 3-game sweep of Hickory. Kiki Cuyler was the big hitting star, going 7-for-12 with 7 RBIs. The pitching rotaion of "Deacon" Danny MacFayden, "Big" Bill Lee and Red Lucas looks tough...Tucumcari also took two of three from Bob Spatz's Tuskegee Tacobenders, which included a shutout by "Cowboy" Jim Winford...Believe it or not, a March stats report is going out along with this report.

BLOOD-SUCKING PET

(Amherst, Nebraska) -- When somebody in the Gillespie family gets a cut or a bloody nose -- it's a job for Superman. Superman is the family's pet leech who lives in the fridge. Superman came into the Gillespies' lives when it helped save nine-year-old Amy's finger, after she nearly severed it chopping firewood. Doctors used Superman and about 30 other specially-raised bloodsuckers to improve circulation by preventing blood from pooling in her injured finger. Her dad, Scott Gillespie says Amy wanted to keep one of the leeches when she returned to her Amherst, Nebraska, home. Now, she has one of the most unusual pets in town. And when someone in the family gets a minor boo-boo -- it's dinner time for Superman.

STATE SUPREME COURT DISMISSES JUDGE

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) -- The state's highest court dismissed a county judge who is accused of sending a used condom to a courthouse secretary with whom he was said to be pursuing a relationship.

Court-ordered DNA tests matched the condom with his semen.

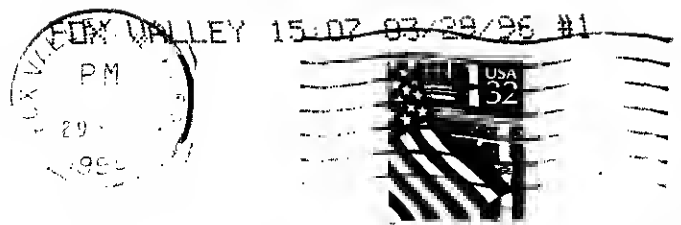

The Indiana Supreme Court's ruling also bars Vigo County Judge William McClain from practicing law in Indiana for two years.

The court said it was convinced that McClain, 39, "participated in sending" his own used condom to Laura Hauser in 1991, in a letter designed to demonstrate that her boyfriend was being unfaithful to her.

"These actions constitute willful misconduct and violate the ethical standards respondent was obligated to uphold," the court said.

McClain denies the allegations, and his lawyers said they will ask the court to reconsider the case.

McClain's distant cousin, Thomas McQueary, has said that he, and not the judge, sent the condom to Hauser because he disliked her boyfriend. McQueary said he got the condom from a wastebasket in his house, thinking it was his. McClain, who earned $90,000 a year, said he had sex in McQueary's house at times because he lived with his parents and lacked privacy at home. The high court called the explanation an "eleventh-hour tale of vengeance and coincidence."
